More Hints from the Model Garage

If the transmission indicator light fails on a '66 Plymouth Belvedere, the trouble may be a bad ground connection. Drill a small hole through the support bracket at four o'clock from the wheel (as shown) and insert a ground screw. Make sure the turn-signal wires are out of the way.

Hooking a dwell meter to the primary side of the coil on a late-model Buick Special is tricky. An easy way is to slide a piece of vacuum wiper hose over a length of  $\frac{3}{16}$ " copper tubing, exposing 1" of tubing on either side. Hook this connector between the terminal and the meter.
